Funk and fusion players like guitarists Guthrie Govan and bassist Bootsy Collins have used this type of sound to great rhythmic effect. It was also an integral part of Jerry Garcia's signature guitar sound. It is also quite common that customers throw out

Its real claim to fame is the humanizer effect that is supposed to mimic vowel sounds. This all seems like a lot of fun, but one you start exploring this pedal, you will soon find yourself disappointed. The confusing interface, poor effect quality, and overall frustrating nature of this pedal do not bode well for its use with horns. It is not worth the trouble. All of its settings have a lot of promise and seem to be able to give you a nice range of sonic options. The reality is however, that most, if not all of those effects do not work very well and are not useful. The effects are quiet, bodiless, and some seem simply not to work. Use the easy tonecrafting menu to set the quality of your sound to match the genre of music you play. This sturdy pedal also allows you to switch from autowah to dynamicwah, and it even replicates human voice sounds. Try it out on a bass guitar and use it to add some funkiness to your bass licks. The Boss AW3 Dynamic Wah pedal also gives you realtime control when you use it along with a compatible compression pedal. This sturdy W3 wah pedal is fully encased in metal to ensure maximum dependability on the road or in the recording studio. The wah sounds a bit thin and unnatural, and the vocal function is very lofi. I'd recommend the MXR bass auto wah or the Digitech synth wah for vocal sounds over this pedal. For now I'm sticking with my old Dunlop bass wah. I have tried a few other of these autowahs and I like this particular pedal much better! You can tap the pedal twice to lock in a setting. The range of wah sounds I get out of this pedal makes it my preference. And the body is metal. It is full size rather than the mini size that is so common now. But it can do what my Maxon AF9 can't do. Too much to describe in a review. I'm keeping both for different reasons.

All I can say is that it's great and at the price you can get it used is worth the test. If you don't like it you can just resell it. The demos on YouTube don't do it justice. Verisign. Mr. H. J. Lee 4.0 out of 5 stars I am pretty sure that, like other Boss pedals, guitar players will find it great.
